Level	Main idea	Concepts	Public sector		Private Sector	Academy, NGOs and IO
			High-level officials	Mid-level officials
Level I: Economic doctrines and corporate cultures	Neutrality principle	Subsidiary State	State's subsidiarity was very clear, and it was fundamental to sustain it for the market's correct operation	Neoliberalism punctured any incentive policy for any sector	Companies also preferred this scheme of neutrality	I) Desire for peace and governance at a particular moment II) The idea that those who had already endured privatization, openness and change under the dictatorship were not going to oppose, and those who might have opposed had not resisted previous reforms
	Short-term vision in the Government's action	Electoral cycles		Modifying the presidential periods to four years. This makes impossible to achieve processes of greater magnitude	State policies design is highly related to electoral cycles	Innovation or simply trying to add value necessarily imply a vision of "investing now to collect later", and this is outside the type of society we have molded
	Services not priority	Goods are not equal to services	Very low understanding of the differences between goods and services			There were more relevant priorities than to industrialize the country and less to support services
	Chilean business class	Reinter business class	Absence of regulation to take them entrepreneurs		I) The associativity problem is very deep within the sector II) In a demand response scheme, those who can export are very large or exceptions	The particular feature of Chile is that they are small elites, isolated and used to agree amongst them
Level II: Specificity of industrial and economic services	Low sector understanding	Services complexity	Services trade promotion came late to ProChile Policies have always been designed for goods and copied for services, which don't work	At the request of a small group and due to the requirement of international commitment	I) Exporting services as part of a development strategy appears in the region relatively late. Chile was one of the first comers II) The pre-eminence of taxes for services export was highlighted as more important than for goods	I) Services are difficult to understand and, in turn, are very heterogeneous II) The financial system, despite being a service, does not seem to understand or be willing to support service companies
	Hard to incorporate a sector that has not been statistically weighted	Absence of statistics	I) Service sector has problems in registering them, which would account for a first great difficulty II) The size of the State is also a limitation	There are no statistics, even at the global level, except for some efforts by WTO and OECD. It is impossible to convince the Ministers to do something if you do not explain the profitability and less to the Parliament, not to mention the Treasury	A problem for the private sector, where associativity is fundamental. Public-private partnerships in Chile were not perceived to be developed
	Public sector that has lack of creativity	Policies	CORFO was dismantled in a country that need it	Competition is essential in the world of services, because the margins are small and they are intensive in human capital, in particular to be an SME to survive		I) The government does not make changes, like stamp taxes. II) Chile is a country of improvisation and little politics
	Trading partners	Regional problems			In the private sector there was a negative perception about trading partners	Natural partners are countries of the region.
	Human capital	Low English proficiency	Professions with advanced academic degrees are not exclusively needed	Services demand skilled manpower and we do not speak English. Vocational training of technical staff is important in a country development	Chile needs human capital urgently, and mainly for services
Level III: specific policies and instruments	Norms and regulatory restrictions for policy implementation	Disperse monetary efforts	Oriented to horizontal not sectorial policies	There is little money and there is an important dispersion of efforts	There are few or no strategies in the modification of norms or regulations that will help to advance in the conversion
	CORFO	Services cluster	CORFO failed to evaluate a program that was as relevant as the global services cluster	The program was discontinued and funds were redirected. The cluster failed because what was raised to attract high technology actually attracted cheap labor rather than modern services		Programs are very directed to goods. With respect to the cluster initiative, they are long-term processes that should have been allowed to mature
	ProChile	Export promotion		- Low budget - Services department doesn't have the time, or an area that analyzes the possibilities of development of any sector - The promotion policies would be within ProChile (Sectorial brands), where services are not a priority, for example, budgetary differences with forestry and livestock sector		Private sector has a better perception, but always individually, for the support received
